the indications of their approach, and can see far off the coming of the dreaded disease. It is as fatal, commer-cially, to those whose affairs are in a deranged, un-healthy state, as the choices is, physically, to those whose systems are deranged by dissipation.

There are decided indications in the commercial horizon, of an epidemic similar to that which spread through the country in 1835 1836, and 1837; and if measures are not taken to arrest or palliate it, the effect will, without doubt, be fully as disastrous. For several years previous to 1837, there was a steady expansion in every branch of business—in prices for every description of pro-perty; in public and private credits; a stoady accumula-tion was going on in the Treasury of the United States; and everything was going ahead at a most rapid rate. Speculation was the order of the day. The banks strived to outdo each other in extending their dis-sount lines; States tried to excel each other in the extension of public works, and contractions of debts; every species of extravagance of a public or pri-The currency became so inflated that prices for property of all kinds advanced enormously, and the manufac-turers of Europe found better markets here for their fabrics than in any other part of the world, and consequently filled them with their goods. Our importations were, therefore, excessive, having advanced, in a few years, from one hundred to nearly two hundred millions of dolcommenced, increased their line of discounts, in a few years, from two hundred to more than five hundred mil-Hons of dollars; and the impetus given to speculation by this immense expansion of private credits, resulted in and ruined so many individuals, who, but a few months before, imagined themselves in the possession of great wealth. The banks saved themselves by suspension, States and corporations became delinquent, individuals preciated, and fell back into first hands; finally, the nkrupt law stepped in, and wiped out all evidences of individual indebtedness, and for several years there appeared to be little life in the financial or wity presented themselves, and there were indications of a bealthy recovery in mercantile matters. At first the movement was slow, and very little progress was made until the California excitement commenced, when an imecommercial affairs generally, equal to anything of the kind ever before experienced in the history of the country. The long dormant energies of every class were at once aroused, and everything seemed to spring instantly into life and activity.

It is now nearly three years since that movement commenced, and it has every day been gaining strength. In many particulars no comparison can be made between the present expansion and that which so suddenly collapsed in 1837. That had for its basis nothing but paper, and paper formed the principal element of its growth.

This has for its basis gold; and is, therefore, more healthy and substantial. Its foundation is firmer, but it is not impregnable. California has, thus far, realized all our most sanguine expectations, and thus far no one can have been disappointed. Up to this time the inflation has not been carried to a dangerous point; but we fear that it will be difficult, nay, impossible to arrest it before we reach that point. The impetus already obtained is so great, and the movement has already obtained is tained such headway, that we begin to get alarmed, not so much at any immediate danger, as in relation to the probable result. Similar causes produce similar effects The direct causes that created the surplus revenue in the bands of the government in 1836 and 1837, which, of itpart of the banks, and all the evils that followed, are again at work, with a prospect of similar results. The importations during the past two years have been excessive. The revenue from customs has been immense; an i surplus is now accumulating. Whatever the surplus may be for a few years, it matters little, for it will be withdrawn from the banks and channels of trade, and be appropriated in proper time to the liquidation of our public debt; but what we wish to point out is the fact that there is a surplus revenue now on hand, and that the amount is derived entirely from customs, showing an enormous importation of foreign goods, which leads to an enormous increase in private credits, great ex-travagance in the habits of all classes, and re-quires a great expansion in the banking move-ment of the country. Now we do not complain o much of this surplus, for under the financial system of the government, this surplus cannot form a basis for bank expansion as in 1834 '35-36 and '37; but we condemn the cause of its accumulation, viz., excessive importation and over-trading, over expansion in the currency, an I inflated prices; and if something is not done at once to arrest this movement, to do away with the causes of this accumulation of funds in the public treasury, it will take something more than California gold to save us from results equally disastrous as those realized in 1807. Gold and allwer are a very good basis for bank credits, but the expansion has, for some time past, been going on too rapidly, for even such a basis to long continue safe or sound, and it will prove to be so if some check is not soon placed upon their operations. The increase of bank capital in $21,500,000 This is equal to an increase in the banking capital of the country of about ten per cent in less than twelve months. This of itself is sufficient to show the extent of the expansion. This new capital is large enough to form the basis of credits for at least fifty millions of dollars, which, with the additional expansion on the old capital, has brought the aggregate up to a very high point. The expansion of the banks is but a small item in the grand movement, as will be seen by the annexed estimate of increased indebtedness on the part of federal, State, county city, and town governments.

Counties cities and towns for railroads and other internal improvements.

Solution of the indeatroness direct debts.

... $255,000,000 This is, without doubt, far within limits, but it is sufficient to show that public credits have kept pace with other things, and that capital has not long remained idle. We do not see so much, or rather we do not reaffine so much, the rapid inflation going on in every de-partment of business, as in former years. It was in 1855 and 35 confined more to the banks. At that time, those institutions regulated finencial affairs more than at present, and it was therefore more visible, more apparent. Now, capital is mot at every turn, and credits are obtained from a hundred channels. It is true that in the lower port of the city there is a bank on every corner, and they all loan as largely as possible, but private bankers and capitalists have done a large business and aided largely in the expansion. In the midst of this state of things, with an importation greater than over before known, with all the elements of speculation is most setive operation, and the future filled with visions of extravagance, we find the Secretary of the Treasury predicting a deficiency in the revenue from customs. With the probability of a surplus on hand at the close of another fiscal year of fifteen millions of dol-lars, the Secretary of the Treasury predicts a deficiency of more than one million of dollars, a difference of sixteen millions of dollars between the probable result and official estimate. This is about as near as could be expected from a member of the cabinet whose whole time and at-Acution appears to be absorbed by his professional duties. se counsel for Florida claimants; and it would be well enough for the Treasury Department to avoid for the future all estimates of revenue, or get some practical merchant to make such calculations for the government. Any man, possessing a knowledge of the first principles of finance and commerce, must have known six months ego, (when Mr. Corwin made his estimates) that the next two years-1850 and 1851 -were going to be the meet progressive years ever known in the history of the country. At that time all the elements calculated to bring about most extraordinary results were in active operation, and it required no very great faresight to see what would, in all human probability, be the counc

Lapracter, like Reading is an old Gorman antile.

Lancaster, like Reading, is an old German settlement, and contains about thirteen thousand inhabitants. It has three large cotton factories, and is a thriving city in every respect. Though Harrisburg is the State capital, and Philadelphia the commercial metropolis of Pennsylvania, Lancaster is the political focus where the wires are pulled and the political foc liticians of the State concoct their schemes and organics their plans of action. Standing on this eminence, your correspondent will review the two battles lately fought in Pennsylvania—the battle fields, and the war-riers—and give you a description of the disposition of the forces for two other conflicts which are yet to come off, and to which the recent actions were but the prelimi-nary skirmishes. Lancaster is the residence of Buchanan, nary skirmishes. Lancaster is the residence of Buchanan, and the old war horse. Fraser, who are deadly enemies; and if the former is not defeated in the nomination, it will not be for want of exertion on the part of said war horse and his friends. It is curious enough that Buchanan has been always beaten in his own county, and that he is about the most unpopular public man in it. The whigs have had complete possession of this poet for many years, and there is no reason to believe that the coming campaign will be an exception. That the party regard it as their stronghold, is indicated by the fact that they have selected it for their State convention.

that they have selected it for their State convention. The whigs will settle in one gathering, what required two on the part of the democrats. Their candidates for Governor. Canal Commissioner, and five Judges of the Supreme Court, will be all selected by the convention that is to meet on the 24th instant.

The office of Governor, though the highest in the gift of the people, is not regarded as the most desirable. Redoes not possess the part or age now that it formerly did, there being only seventeen lucrative offices at the disposal of the Chief Magistrate, with the power of making the honorary appointments of colonels ad infinitum. The slary is so small that it does not cover the expenses, and the distinction is sought rather as an honor than as a source of emolument. Of course, it is of great political importance to the party whose candidate is successful; but that is all. It is different with the office of Canal Commissioner, which is greedly sought for, on account of the enormous patronage and lucre attached to it—all the appointments on six hundred miles of canal. Herce the hard context and the large number of candidates for the office at the Reading Convention. If Seth Clover the democratic candidate, succeeds at the polls he will be in "clove;" it till the ensuing election. The votes for this office always run far ahead of the rest of the ticket. Not only all the voters in the State are drummed up, but a few are prought in from other States to swell the numbers. The party in possession have a tremendora salvantage over their opponents. Not only will all the officers connected with the canal vote to keep themselves in, but they will strain every since and nerve to precure the votes of friends and relations in the opposite ranks. The democratic party have a fair majority in the State, and have beaten the whigs over the marrellously increase in a very short time. There will be about two Irish laborar for every stone along the line. The whigs have but a very small chance of winning this office, with its spo mot being the leader of that section of Pennsylvania, his influence is of same importance. Hence, every stratagem has been used to get him into harness; but, from the imprudence of some of the party, he gave a kick or two at the Harrisburg Conventien, which spread considerable alarm. There are some democratic politicians here, however, who, looking beyond the local struggle for Governor, to the great national contest for the White House, are of opinion that the support of Wilmot or any compromise with him would be more damaging to the democracy in the Presidential struggle, than otherwise, as it would be likely to give offence to the South, and displace Pennsylvania from the position she ambitions, namely, the casting or controlling vote in the Battimore Convention.

The two elections—that for the State and that for the nation—come or close together that they must be fought on the same platform and under the same banner. That the free soil issue will be raised, there can scarcely exist a doubt, for the resolutions at Reading speak right out, and the Harrisburg Convention has endorsed them indirectly, though there was an avoidance of anything direct that night precipitate a rupture with Wilmot and the free soilers. It was on this account that Wilmot was sent to the judicial instead of the other convention, the first being theroughly political, and the second only partially so. For the same casson two conventions were held, instead of one. One thing is certain—if Wilmot does not give an active support to the ticket, he will not oppose it. That the democratic party intend to fight the battle upen the platform of the Union, the constitution, and the late compromise measures of Congress, is evident from another fact heddes the resolutions and speeches at Radding. At the fag end of the session the democratic mambers, by an able manouvre, passed a bill repealing the law of 187, so cherefrour to the South, and giving the law of 187, so cherefrour to the South, and giving the law of 187, so cherefrour to the four the de but so effectively that it is chrewdy suspected he repents of his shitches before this time. The time for signing of this hill has not yet expired; but if he signs it now, it will be said he was driven to it by the assaults of the enemy, and it will be claimed as a victory. The free sellers, on the other hand, will take off-noe and desert him. In fact, it was a very exhiful movement on the part of the deniceratic leaders, and places Johnston in a vary neckward predicament. His brother is the editor of a whig paper in Harrisburg, which is perpering Bigler about his speech at Reading, attacking, him on its granmar, its tropes and figures and mige instapher. This kind of warfars, however, is not very effective. Eigher is going to stump it all through the State, and will invite Johnston to accompany him in his burgy, in order that they may discuss their respectively decline. He is by no means so smart a man as Bigler at a speech. Higher polled 21,000 against Johnston, on the stump, in his own county, and Johnsten did not get a stugle vote.

The meninetions be that Reading and Harrisburg have resulted in favor of the Buchanan interest, but not to the extent that his partitans are endeavoring to make the country believe. With the exception of Gibson, the present Christ Justice, who is a very old man, and not a politician being regarded as a sort of aristocrat, (though the greatest and soundest lawyer in the State) the nominers are all Buchanan roem. The most active politician among the judicial candisates is Campbell, however, will be found a source of weakness, as well as strength, to the ticket. He will undeubtedly rally the Irish votes, and the Calbulics, to a certain exient. But it is very questioned the winder of the surface of the ing in cash $1,607,100, and upon which there is no either mortage or lies.
